

Egyptian Dreams and Cairo's History and Reality
Conserving Africa's Largest City and Sharing its Joys
Cairo Cairo and Giza Governates Arab Republic of Egypt

Why Cairo? Cultural resource conservation and historic area management theories are tested there. Cairo's medieval art and architecture is of unparalleled importance. Egypt confronts problems distinct from building conservation concerns, but grasps that heritage tourism can improve the economy. The survival of Cairene culture depends on foreign non-governmental agencies and foreign governments. It relies on the Arab Republic's confidence that the well-being of destitute Egyptians living in historic places, some of which are illegally occupied, has genuine value. Cairene cultural resources can improve the lives of the Egyptian poor. Strong technical building-assembly knowledge, leadership abilities, and work ethic put the plans into action. It is a crucible of preservation. And, Egyptians retain a sense of humor, on which Brian Broadus is delighted to play with his sketches for his friends there. If historic preservation works in urban Cairo, and for the Egyptian citizens, it will work everywhere.

"History does not mark and measure change: it illuminates that which prevails against change."

Brian Carter Broadus LLC Architects

(1+) 434 882 0867 or brian.broadus@broadusllc.com